GENERAL DESCRIPTION

Halekulani is a luxury, 453-room hotel situated on five prime oceanfront acres on Waikiki Beach. Halekulani is home to three restaurants, three cocktail lounges, one pool/bar, a spa, a fitness & movement studio, a business center, a hospitality suite, an in-house laundry and dry-cleaning facility, a print shop, a bakery, a florist, and eight meeting and banquet rooms.

HISTORY

The original Halekulani opened in 1907 as a residential hotel called Hau Tree, owned by Robert Lewers. It consisted of a beachfront home and five bungalows.

In 1917, Juliet and Clifford Kimball purchased the hotel, gradually expanding and establishing the property as a stylish resort for wealthy vacationers. The hotel was named Halekulani, which translates to “House Befitting Heaven.”

In the 1930s, they replaced the old Lewers home with a plantation, a mansion-styled Main Building with a high-pitched hip roof to catch the cooling trade winds. The roof, known as the “Dickey” roof, is a trademark of legendary Hawaiian architect, C.W. Dickey.

The Norton Clapp family of Seattle bought Halekulani in 1962 following the Kimball’s passing, with its Main Building and 37 one-and two-story bungalows. In 1981, the hotel was sold to Mitsui Fudosan America, Inc., which formed the Honolulu-based Halekulani Corporation. The hotel was then closed, and the aging bungalows were demolished. Halekulani reopened in 1984 with the historic Main Building restored and retained along with Coconut Palms.
